A GOOD MAN'S KIND OF LIFE

He wasn't one for fancy words or making a big show, just a man who worked hard every day and let his actions show.

He loved the rumble of a digger, the earth beneath its weight, the kind of honest, solid work that built a life up straight.

A cold Steinlager in his hand, after a long, hard day, was his way of slowing down and letting worries drift away.

His Hilux was his pride and joy, it carried him through it all,
from muddy tracks to open roads, it never let him fall.

And that Harley... freedom on two wheels, the wind against his face, a quiet kind of happiness no one could replace.

But more than all those things he loved, one stood right by his side—his dog Bud, a loyal mate, his shadow and his pride.

He wasn't perfect, none of us are,
but he was strong and true, the kind of man you could rely on no matter what you'd do.

And though he's gone, he's left his mark in stories we will tell—in engines, dust, and laughter, and the life he lived so well
